The Statesboro News.

STATESBORO, GA., FRIDAY, APRIL, 17, 1903.

VOL. 3, NO. 6.

Reminiscences (Contd.)

In those days of which I am writing, the modes of traveling, the vehicles and farming implements, were such as might have been used by the old Romans. It is safe to say that there have been more discoveries, inventions and improvements in every department of useful knowledge, made in the century just closed than in any five centuries before it. In the present letter I will tell something of travel and transportation in the early days of which I have been writing in my previous letters.

To mention private conveyance first, travel was done on foot, on horse-back or in carts; huggies were mostly unknown then. A few of the wealthier citizens owned gigs or a high awkward carriage called a barouche, but these latter were scarce. All the country west of the Altamaha river was then almost an unbroken wilderness with only a few white settlers, and the Seminole Indians were unfriendly and troublesome. Notwithstanding this there were several men in Bulloch who resolved to remove and take their families to Thomas county. Among the number were the Groovers, Jones and Danmarks, and some others. They settled and named the town of Grooverville in Thomas county.

Before their departure for these unknown wilds an old gentleman said: "If they escape the Indians I will never see them again when they go to that far away country." And really it was practically further away than New York is now. If some one had told the old gentleman that the time would come when it would be possible to eat breakfast in Statesboro and supper in this "far off country" he would have believed it no more than we believe in the reality of Baron Munchausen.

I cannot adequately describe the privations and difficulties with which those emigrants had to contend. They were going to the new country to which they were going could not furnish them with any of these necessities. Besides these articles every family must have a steel mill which was a hand mill on which corn could be ground into grits and coarse meal; the hopper would hold about a peck of grain. It was a saying among them that when one of them was taken sick the remedy was "a heavy dose of beef and honey and sweat it out at daybreak." The mover usually employed several of his neighbors to go along with him and carry a load to prevent him from having to return for the rest of his "plunder," as all household furniture was then called. There were few roads then that led southward to the Altamaha river and almost none at all after crossing that stream. The emigrants had to skirt the stream down to old Fort Barrington River to cross. I believe that the A. & G. R. R. now crosses near the old ferry. After crossing the river they made their way as best they could, often cutting out their own roads and crossing streams on log rafts. I mention these circumstances to show what occurred so near your doors within the memory of persons still living.

Before the C. R. R. was built the merchants and planters in the up country had to send their cotton to market by wagon either to Augusta or Savannah and carry back their goods by the same method. I have seen a caravan of wagons nearly a half mile long and all loaded with cotton, some from as high up as Macon. Many of the wagons owned one or more of the wagons and teams and followed the road for a living. When the Central R. R. was built in 1836-7 it was a death blow to the cotton hauling by wagon. About the last trip that the wagons made they might be heard singing some doggerel verses, one of which was: "Go down to Savannah and inquire for a load, and they will tell you directly, its on the railroad. They have ruined our market, we can't sell a horse, and upon every market they have been a curse."

This feeling was shared by a large majority of the citizens. The public stage coach which plied between Macon and Savannah was also forced out of business when the railroad came. I cannot close this subject without trying to describe the indignation of the people when the corps of surveyors for the Central ran the line for the road through Bulloch county.

The people had never seen and many of them had never heard of a railroad and they really did not know what kind of an "animal" it was. The farmers inquired of some of the leading men of the county for information about railroads, and was told by one of the most prominent citizens of the county, one who was a member of the legislature; that the cars were propelled by boiling water in large boilers heated by immense fires and sparks from these fires would set fire to all dwellings, barns, fences and grass within their reach. This was enough, and the citizens were determined that the road should not pass through the county.

I do not know how the managers of the road learned about the temper of the citizens of Bulloch county, but

Rabbit And Rattlesnake.

Recently we printed, from our trustworthy correspondent at Lyons, Ga., an interesting story about a rabbit and a rattlesnake. The gist of it was that the rabbit had been placed in a cage with a four-foot rattler, in the anticipation that they would dine together, the rabbit constituting the menu. However, expectations were disappointed. The bright morning snake was found in the cage dead, with the flesh eaten from the back of its head and neck, and the rabbit sitting up in one corner wearing an air of apparent unconcern. There were signs of a desperate struggle about the cage but the rabbit was none the worse for the encounter. There was every indication that the rabbit, contrary to rabbit lore, had defended himself against the attacks of the rattlesnake with the greatest success, and after vanquishing the foe had expressed contempt for him by dining off the chuck-steak at the back of his head.

It was asserted by the correspondent that this was "not a snake story," in the common acceptance of that term; which meant, of course, that it had the correspondence's confidence. The narrative struck the fancy of the New York Times, which delights in recording the doings of beasts, birds and reptiles. But, unfortunately, the Times' snake and rabbit expert proved skeptical. He wrote: "This, the News says, is not a snake story. Well, perhaps it isn't. There is, however, a short word that would be a pretty fair use to it. The word is not a safe one to use in the south, and that, doubtless, is why it didn't occur to the News."

The correspondent at Lyons, upon reading the Times' comment, was not in the least surprised. He assured us that if he had fought every time the narrative was questioned in his presence and called a "lie," and if he had won every fight, he would now be no bigger than a pound of soap after a week's washing. And yet he sticks to the original story as being veracious from end to end. There are stranger things in this world than were ever dreamed of in Horatio's philosophy; and this snake-killing rabbit, he holds, is one of them.

But, the correspondent assures us there is a sequel to the story that is no less entertaining than the original narrative itself. On the day following that of the encounter between bunny and the rattlesnake, the rabbit, sickened and died. An autopsy was held, presided over by competent rabbit hunters, snake catchers and medical men. After a thorough examination and an exhaustive consideration of the evidence, it was unanimously agreed that the rabbit came to its death from an attack of acute indigestion, superinduced by an over-indulgence in raw rattlesnake meat.

We wish it were possible to send the New York Times the left hind foot of this rabbit, as an evidence of the correctness of the story in all particulars, as an assurance of good will and as an amulet against rattlesnakes.—Morning News.

For liver troubles and constipation there's nothing better in creation Than Little Early Risers, the famous little pills. They always effect a cure and save doctor bills. Little Early Risers are different from all other pills. They do not weaken the system, but act as a tonic to the system by arousing the secretions and restoring the liver to the full performance of its functions naturally.

What is the reason some of our more enterprising citizens don't take hold of the matter of inducing the Farmers Institute for the 17th Senatorial District to meet in Statesboro. We are the commercial center of the district, and there is no reason why we should not have this convention, which will be composed of the more enlightened of our farmer friends meet with us. Statesboro can and will make the state with us both pleasant and profitable.

This convention will soon be called to meet somewhere, and if we miss it, it will be due to the carelessness of our people. Better quit talking smallpox and let war and go ahead to get something that is worth something. Who will now take hold of this question?

Good For Children. Pleasant to take and harmless. One Minute Cough Cure gives instant relief in all cases of cough, croup, whooping cough, etc. It does not pass takes effect right at the seat of the trouble. It draws out the inflammation from the throat and soothes and cures permanently by enabling the lungs to contribute pure life-giving and life-sustaining oxygen to the blood and tissues.

Due Notice Is Served.

Due notice is hereby served on the public generally that DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve is the only salve on the market that is made from the pure, unadulterated witch hazel. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve has cured thousands of cases of piles that would not yield to any other treatment, and this fact has brought out many worthless counterfeits. These persons who get the genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are never disappointed, because it cures.
